Taking turns telling stories

Template A2

The model "Story Spine", to be translated as "backbone of history", was originally designed by Kenn Adams. It is used to create well-structured stories and is based on a series of sentence beginnings that facilitate the telling of a story in a group. The following is a modified form of these narrative steps.

Cut out the following beginnings of sentences and make them visible to everyone:

First person: The beginning

Once upon a time…

Second person: The beginning

Every day…

Third person: The impulse

One day, however…/ All of a sudden…

The next players:

For this reason,…/ Therefore,… / Nevertheless,…

The penultimate person: The highlight

Finally,…/ At long last,…

Last person: The moral of the story

To this day, …
